At 50 Andy St. George is fat, Santa-Clauss bellied, with a black beard and hair showing gray. He smiles easily and often, generally with accompanying added emphasis in his speaking. He has a heavy accent. Hungarian. Royalist still. His wife, also his research assistant and typist, saysshe wants him to be a male chauvenist. They appear to be somewhat detached from their child/children, who have more modern views. Andy does not appea to be the kind of portly man who raided Cuba. More like a professor. I was really surpri to see how round he had let himself become. Bob Brown, on the other hand, while his ligh brown hair is thinning, has kept himself in manly condition, carries himself erectly but with conspicuous military attitude. He affects modist dress, like a moderate graduate mo cycle clubber, going in for browns, in sports jacket and emply-adorned leather jacket.11
